PRIDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 13.

POLITICAL AMERICANISM. The time was, when American political ideas were regarded as the antitheses of European, when America was efficially held forth as "the land of liberty" and the "saylum of the oppressed;" indeed, when the United States were held forth to the world as the subject of a new Folitical dispensation, of the apocalypse of a new law, or gospel, upon the relations of governing and governed. Not only did this idea powall among the people as an honest persuaesion, and was the staple or theme of the "wrapt enator's facile sympathy;" steking expression ear outlet upon days and occasions commemoratilve of events connected with our revolutionary cetruggle, but it was the postulate of official action, a leading if not controlling principle of Government, legislative and executive, in its doreign relations. It was the thome alike of Presidents' messages, of the dispatches of the Department of State, of Congressional debate im bonce and counts.

So much was it a feeling that instances of deparince from our political lilens in European political administration, though strictly in accordance with their own, would fill the breast of the War in gion Government with such in-"ignant mantion as to call forth official denumsel, ion is special mearage, or mealution, while the vision, however impalpable, or associated with whatever of Hoenne, or violence or tumuit, of a revolt against constituted government, was the thema for universal congratulation not less official than popular. Let a possical off inder in Ramin be sent to the Ural, or Siberia, or Kamschatka; or an Eoglishman, or an Irishman, or Austrian, or Francisman, or Spanlard, or Italian, be hang, by abot, or sent to prison for treacon, or treasonable words uttered in speech or print, their governments were held up to exceration, and the reballions sufferer was the subject of anxious political condulence, and, in some instances, of official interference. Or let the people of France overthrow a government, royal or imperial; or Poland attempt to recever her dismembered territory, and with it the right of self government; or Ireland attempt to recover her independence from England, or Hungary attempt to substitute a crown of her own for that of Austria, or Greece to throw off the tyranny of Turkey, or the Spanish American colomiss to throw off the Government of Spain, the Covernment and pupple of the United States beld the rebellion in each case justified, according to their own political procedents, and condemned the Government.

How stands the matter now, so far as the pecple and Government of the present United States are concerned!
